RE: People v. Joseph DeAngelo

Santa Barbara County District Attorney Joyce Dudley, one of six prosecutors in the case of People v. Joseph DeAngelo, said today that the prosecution of Joseph DeAngelo involves dozens of victims and crimes that were committed beginning more than four decades ago.

It was not until the advent of Investigative Genetic Genealogy that we were able to successfully identify DeAngelo as the suspect in a series of rapes, burglaries and murders that spanned 11 counties over more than a decade.

Victims of a crime are entitled to finality in their criminal cases, as well as the expectation that the person convicted of committing the crime will be punished by the courts of the State of California.

Victims and their loved ones have a right to be heard, and all six District Attorney's Offices involved in the prosecution of People v. DeAngelo are working closely with the victims in this case to ensure their statements are considered by the Court prior to sentencing.

We have a moral and ethical responsibility to consider any offer from the defense, given the massive scope of the case, the advanced age of many of the victims and witnesses, and our inherent obligations to the victims.

This is an active prosecution, and we will have no further comment until we are in the Sacramento Superior Court on June 29.
